TIMBER ASSESSMENT

Lakoff Timber Evaluation

May 11th, 2026

Michael Bane, Consulting Forester

Bane Forestry & Ecological Restoration, LLC

The timber within the Lakoff property is divided between two sections, which we will simply delineate as the “north” and “south” stands for the purpose of this evaluation. The north stand is bound by property lines to the north and west, while adjoining crop fields within the same ownership to the south and east. The topography of this stand is typical of Franklin county, long and narrow hills descending towards river bottoms with steep to sheer faces between these runs. The soil quality along the crests of these ridges appear to be consistent with those which are required to grow high quality timber. Impressive individual black walnuts (Juglans nigra) grow scattered across these ridges and show little signs of impedance by poor site indices. From a foresters perspective, high quality walnuts are uncommon on these types of sites. Little effort would be required in order to maintain a population of valuable walnuts, as they seemingly grow this ease across this stand. Looking more down-slope, exposed limestone peers from the hill faces and gives way to stands of hackberry (Celtis occidentalis), hickory (Carya spp.), chinquapin oak (Quercus muhlenbergii), and bur oak (Quercus macrocarpa). This species complex is commonplace within Franklin county, and is indicative of lower site indices and shallow bedrock. The chinquapin oaks that reside on these steep hills grow with gnarled tops and short merchantable boles (trunks), all pointing to challenges in soil fertility. Trees on sites such as these grow slower than their counterparts higher and lower on the slope. Fortunately, chinquapin oak is a valuable species (being a part of the white oak complex) and maintains its value well against the ebb and flow of the timber market.

The south stand is remarkably different from the north stand in terms of timber age, species, size, and quality. The western and southern edges of this stand are property boundaries, with the north and east edges being crop fields of the same ownership. The topography of this stand is considerably more extreme than that of the north stand. Steep hills and large falls into creek beds are quite common. Soil fertility across the stand appears to be consistently average, at times leaning more towards poor. A significant portion of this tract maintains no merchantable timber, and is dominated by osage-orange (Maclura pomifera) and Amur honeysuckle (Lonicera maackii). The portion of this tract that does contain merchantable timber is primarily composed of hickory, white oak (Quercus alba), scarlet oak (Quercus coccinea), and assorted low grade species. There is a notable lack of mature timber, as most large trees are remnant pastured or “wolf” trees with short boles and low quality. The occasional premier white oak can be found across this stand, and great care should be taken in order to perpetuate that resource. Young pole sized timber can be found in many areas, and presents excellent future potential value for this stand. The young timber is of excellent quality, and needs few inputs in order to collect the future value.

The values for these stands were figured upon a clear-cut type harvest, accounting for all presently merchantable timber. This type of harvest is not recommended, and would be of great
